What is the AnatomyArchive?

The Concept

The AnatomyArchive is collaborative just like Wikipedia, which means you can create your own pages and study other pages.

How AnatomyArchive will Improve Your Art

1. By Teaching others (creating a page that others will look at) YOU will actually gain the most knowledge!
I realized this when tutoring some kids, and now im using this hack to make yall better artists :)
Therefore the slogan "Learning by Teaching"

2. Over time AnatomyArchive will become a reference book, that you can flip open anytime! Perfect for keeping you company while making art.

The Vision

I wanted to create a learning website for artists that is free of distracting ads and even more importantly free of paywalls. Basically no distractions, straight to the point -> Art
Many times I found a cool website with useful information, only for it to be locked behind a subscription or similar. I think that's the trend right now and it's a little annoying. Let's change that with AnatomyArchive!

Supporting individual artists, if you like what they do, is of course appreciated, but the overall theme of this website is free.

The "free to use" aspect

At the core this website is a source of information, so an easy way to spread this information is just as important. There should't be a big problem using any of this site's knowledge - here are my thoughts:
I saw a few of my professors at university cite Wikipedia in their presentations and I thought it would be cool if there would be a library for art teachers. I like the idea of learning with the AnatomyArchive for yourself but helping others improve sounds just as good. Thus I want to make it easy for anybody to use the content of this website for teaching and similar purposes. Doesn't matter if you just want to use a page you created yourself or the page of another creator.

I tried to implement this into the rules of this website by making all content free to use*, more about that in the Terms of Use.
